

Looking for a few good Children

The Child Development program at Jonathan Law High School is looking for preschool-aged children for our program for the 2016-2017 school year. These children need to be three or four years of age, and fully potty trained. Our program meets two mornings per week on Tuesdays and Thursdays, between the hours of 7:20 and 10:20. The high school students who are in the Child Development courses work with the children as they play and interact with their peers.

We like to think of our class as an enrichment experience for children. Although not a traditional preschool program, we incorporate arts and crafts activities as well as other learning centers where children can work on physical, intellectual, emotional, social and moral development. They learn appropriate ways to resolve problems and interact in socially acceptable ways with their peers.

This is a program that has been around for as long as Jonathan Law has existed, and the course continues to command a high level of interest among students. We just need to fill the Child Learning Center with preschool-aged children. And did I mention the best part? It's FREE!
